

Professional Athletes and the Average Worker

By: Amanda Martin
Elementary school music teacher; M.A.Ed. In Curriculum and Instruction

Sports
Grades 9–12

Introduction

Should professional athletes make millions to play a sport? Is this fair to the average American worker? Students will write a persuasive essay arguing whether or not the large salary of professional athletes is appropriate.

Learning Objectives

(CCSS.ELA-Literacy.W.9-10.1) Students will write arguments to support claims in an analysis of substantive topics or texts, using valid reasoning and relevant and sufficient evidence.

Materials Needed

- Computers/laptops
- Journals/notebooks/paper

Procedure

1. On the board, display the following question:
Lead an organized discussion on this question and allow several students to share out their thoughts.
2. Display this chart of average salaries in America on the board. Ask students the following question:

Discuss a few student responses as a class. Ensure that the importance of each career is detailed for the students as well.
3. Inform students that they will write a persuasive text in response to that question. They must include at least three supporting paragraphs, an introductory paragraph, and a conclusion. Use the rubric below to grade student work.

Evaluation

Please use the following rubric to evaluate each student's essay.

Continued on page 2

